MILITARY WEAPONS SIMULATORS

InVeris Training Solutions simulated weapons are designed to replicate the form, fit, and function of the associated live weapon. InVeris weapon simulators are designed to last three times as long as their live counterparts.

Our System Controlled Weapons are tethered to the training system to provide the highest degree of weapon control and feedback. System controlled weapons support real-time transmittal and display of weapon handling data to the instructor. The instructor can initiate weapon jams, designated elapsed scenario time, and/or designated number of shots fired. Compressed air provides recoil that is sufficient to disturb the trainee sight picture, requiring the trainee to reacquire the target after each shot.

InVeris Training Solutions also has developed a line of wireless weapon simulators that use commercial wireless technology to communicate with the training system in the same manner as InVeris System Controlled Weapons. InVeris Bluefire® weapons still retain the full sensor feedback and control as our system-controlled weapons.

Each simulated weapon has its breech locking device/receivers machined away in order to install various electronic sensors and pneumatics that provide signals to the Systems' computer, and at the same time render the simulated weapon incapable firing "live" ammunition. This allows the simulated weapon to communicate to the system the various actions the trainees are performing. The weapons are have a comprehensive range of diagnostics to enable the instructor to continually analyze the trainee's weapon handling skills and accurately determine the errors committed by the trainee.
